Dear: Federal Election Committee,

While serving this great country and under the premise of the law as a physician/scientist and through my political fortitude, service obligations and in lieu of compensatory responsibilities see this and 104.5(a)quarterly report.

Financial disclosure reporting continues as required. It has been a long year with many disappointments yet with the determination of candidacy and as a presidential elect positive affirmations for this country remain unaffected.

It is my opinion this is a great country but it is not an unfaultable one. To be able to participate in the judicial system with its many compromises has been a honor. I have never compromised my integrity throughout my life. What is troubling herein is this insatiable opportunity for those who have compromised through the constitution.

Our amendments are a truism, they should be this impenetrable guide which are flawless. Yet, the banter and discussions throughout its mitigated controversy both in court and out of court is measurable. How is it those of us who follow it to the "letter" seemingly are fraught with litigation and yet more controversy? The amendments are the cornerstone of these great United States of America.

The amendments have been a guiding light in the midst of unconstitutional behavior-not by those who defend others but by those who use, for example, freedom of speech as a way to intervene and lie and challenge the constitution and what it means to many of us. Our forefathers fought for the constitution and what it means and so have I yet I have been forsaken by realism.

Who has the right to chastise the constitution? Well, in a way I guess we all have the right to give our opinion if one is allowed to express it. Our illustrious rights for freedom of speech should be a fundamental strong hold all of us can build from.

What has become of all of our rights? Who are we to challenge what it perceived to be the precipice of communication
